AIMS OF THE DOCUMENT

The aims of this document are to:

- define the contexts, structure and aims of the programme
- specify the programme award titles
- identify programme learning outcomes and pedagogic strategies
- articulate the regulations governing the awards defined within the document.

The programme is part of the Politics Postgraduate Framework, and falls under the Bournemouth University regulations governing postgraduate taught awards.

AIMS OF THE PROGRAMME

This programme aims to enable students:

1. To take a psychological perspective on politics, within an interdisciplinary framework.
2. To gain knowledge of psychodynamic and cognitive/communication paradigms in psychology.
3. To deploy that knowledge in the analysis of politics past and present.
4. To gain in-depth psychological understandings of key areas of contemporary politics: democratic processes and institutions, fundamentalist threats to democracy, and changes in political culture.

Drawing on the knowledge and expertise of the Centre of Conflict, Emotion, and Social Justice, as well as the Centre for Comparative Politics and Media Research (a group of researchers with national and international research profiles), the programme encourages an advanced understanding of the issues and debates around the theory and practice of politics in the 21st century.

Postgraduate study will develop students' critical thinking skills and subject understanding to a higher level. These skills will equip graduates for a professional career in the context of politics broadly construed, or for further study at doctoral level.

Political Psychology is a recently formed landscape located at the intersection of political studies and psychology, and it is a result of the recognition of the significance of psychological factors in politics. The curriculum invites students to analyse current issues within aims to ask difficult questions about the fields of social science, focusing on areas such as political leadership and participation, political polarization and antagonism, communication and media, social issues such as race and gender, recent phenomena such as the online culture wars, new populisms, etc. These subjects are contextualised within the 21st Century global political environment.

The programme offers academic rigour and the opportunity for students to specialise in a variety of areas relevant to the scholarship of political psychology and relevant practice. Course content addresses aspects of: contemporary politics, emotion in politics, political culture, democracy, social theory, political discourse and rhetoric, political communication, applied research methodology, political campaigning, international relations, and others. The units will all be conceptually led, combining discussions of theory with an exploration of recent and current political phenomena.

The programme aims to produce flexible graduates who can think critically and analytically and to apply knowledge to real-world situations. The programme also aims to equip graduates with the necessary analytical skills, knowledge and understanding to carry on to further academic research at doctoral level.

By the end of the course, students will have developed strong communication skills and learned to present themselves and their ideas in a professional manner using a variety of communication techniques.

Programme Specification - Section 2

Employers of MA Political Psychology graduates are looking for students with the necessary in-depth knowledge of various political contexts, a strong understanding of the ways in which psychological factors shape these contexts, as well as the psychological implications of political structures and events. Of utmost importance is the development of critical thinking skills, the strategic planning and practical tools relevant to the communication of politics, linking theoretical insight with concrete developments, as well as the comprehensive understanding of a range of research methodologies and techniques for generating insights relevant to politics (policy, campaigning, advocacy, journalism, etc.). This is reflected in the aims and intended learning outcomes of the programme. It is expected that MA Political Psychology will support entry into a range of positions within the broad field of politics. Examples of potential roles include: political consultancy, think tanks, NGOs, advocacy groups, international development, mediation and reconciliation work, campaigning, speech-writing, media relations and other forms of political and public communication.

ALIGNMENT WITH THE UNIVERSITY'S STRATEGIC PLAN

BU2025

The new vision of the university is to be “recognised worldwide as a leading university for inspiring learning, advancing knowledge and enriching society through the fusion of education, research and practice”. The university's values have also been updated to reflect feedback from staff and students and are now: excellence, inclusivity, creativity and responsibility. The proposed programme is aligned with the core principles of BU2025 so that the MA Political Psychology students will:

- get a learning experience is personalised, inter-disciplinary and consistently excellent;
- learn in a diverse and inclusive environment that enables achievement for all;
- participate in vibrant Fusion communities which are collaborative, inclusive, resilient and connected worldwide.

In line with the updated strategic direction of the university, we shall also aim at producing graduates who will, not only be more responsible and sustainable professionals, but will also enrich society as active citizens in their communities. Each of the programme specifications identify specific activities and aspects of the curriculum that align with BU2025. Additionally, the programme embeds elements of the UN Sustainable Development goals implicitly and explicitly to develop reflective, critical citizens who are globally aware and understand how political, societal, cultural, and economic systems are interconnected.

LEARNING HOURS AND ASSESSMENT

Bournemouth University taught programmes are composed of units of study, which are assigned a credit value indicating the amount of learning undertaken. The minimum credit value of a unit is normally 20 credits, above which credit values normally increase at 20-point intervals. 20 credits is the equivalent of 200 study hours required of the student, including lectures, seminars, assessment and independent study. 20 University credits are equivalent to 10 European Credit Transfer System (ECTS) credits.

The assessment workload for a unit should consider the total time devoted to study, including the assessment workload (i.e. formative and summative assessment) and the taught elements and independent study workload (i.e. lectures, seminars, preparatory work, practical activities, reading, critical reflection).

Assessment per 20 credit unit should normally consist of 3,000 words or equivalent. Dissertations and Level 6 and 7 Final Projects are distinct from other assessment types. The word count for these assignments is 5,000 words per 20 credits, recognising that undertaking an in-depth piece of original research as the capstone to a degree is pedagogically sound.

STAFF DELIVERING THE PROGRAMME

Students will usually be taught by a combination of senior academic staff with others who have relevant expertise including – where appropriate according to the content of the unit – academic staff, qualified professional practitioners, demonstrators/technicians and research students.

ADMISSION REGULATIONS

The regulations for this programme are the University's Standard Postgraduate Admission Regulations, which can be found at: <https://www.bournemouth.ac.uk/students/help-advice/important-information>

PROGRESSION ROUTES

There are no formally identified progression routes. It is anticipated that the MA Political Psychology would serve as a unique and highly stimulating platform for doctoral research for those wishing to undertake further study.

Recognition arrangements provide formally approved entry or progression routes through which students are eligible to apply for a place on a programme leading to a BU award. Recognition does not guarantee entry onto the BU receiving programme, only eligibility to apply. In some cases, additional entry criteria such as a Merit classification from the feeder programme may also apply. Please see the Recognition Register for a full list of approved Recognition arrangements and agreed entry criteria.
